Business, Social, One Vision

Social Economy for Competitiveness and Social Justice.

The Chamber of Commerce of Turin, Torino Social Impact and the International Training Centre of the ILO are jointly promoting a public event in Turin on 20 February 2026 to advance the role of the social economy as a key driver of an inclusive, sustainable and people-centred development model that brings together competitiveness with social and environmental objectives.

The event takes place at a crucial moment for the development of the social economy in Italy—strengthened by the drafting of the National Action Plan for the Social Economy and by the consolidation of European and global policies, yet also exposed to uncertainties arising from shifts in the European Union's strategic and geopolitical agenda.

The event also marks the World Day of Social Justice, underscoring the essential role of social enterprises in advancing a just transition toward a sustainable and inclusive global economy.

The agenda will deepen understanding of the role of the social economy as a strategic driver for integrating competitiveness and for promoting social justice and it will highlight recent work by the Global Coalition for Social Justice on the role of the Social and Solidarity Economy in advancing a Human Rights Economy. Moreover, it will explore how the social economy, at a time when democratic identity and core values are under pressure and political systems are increasingly polarized by the dominance of power over cooperative approaches, offers principles and models that serve as pillars for reinforcing, practicing, and promoting civic and democratic values.

The Social and Solidarity Economy in a global perspective: Launch of the Brief on the SSE and the Human Rights Economy

On the occasion of World Social Justice Day, this session highlights recent work by the Global Coalition for Social Justice on the role of the Social and Solidarity Economy in advancing a Human Rights Economy. It will present international efforts to advance social economy models, moving beyond traditional economic metrics and integrating rights into the core of economic policies, labor rights and business practices. The discussion will look at the role of institutional learning, policy innovation and local ecosystems to translate global normative frameworks into national and local results. Particular attention is given to the role of policy labs, advocacy, MOOCs, communities of practice and SSE statistics as drivers of innovative SSE ecosystems in both the Global North and South.

Turin, a Hub for the Social Economy

Turin hosts the event in the belief that local territories play a key role in leveraging the potential of social impact entrepreneurship. The social economy effectively addresses community needs through participation, drawing its strength from local areas and fostering collaboration among people, enterprises, and institutions to create a cohesive and innovative ecosystem.

Turin boasts a highly dynamic social economy ecosystem, supported by impact-oriented financial institutions and an innovative public administration that has consistently driven local policies to promote this sector, often linking it to urban regeneration. In this context Torino Social Impact stands out as a unique initiative fostering the social economy at the territorial level. Established in 2017 within the Committee for Social Entrepreneurship of the Turin Chamber of Commerce and backed by 12 local actors—including the City of Turin and the cooperative federations—it has steadily enhanced the value of multi-stakeholder partnerships. Today, it brings together over 400 partners, spanning public and private actors, profit and non-profit organizations, as well as stakeholders from finance, philanthropy, and research. The initiative has generated numerous opportunities for shared learning and launched several innovative projects, including the Social Impact Stock Exchange, and in 2025 contributed to the adoption of the Metropolitan Plan for the Social Economy Torino 2030.

The city has also been home to the International Training Centre of the ILO since 1964. As part of the International Labour Organization, the centre is committed to promoting decent work and reimagining the future of learning and capacity development for social justice and sustainable development.

The image and the title of the event are connected to the Business, Social, One Vision communication campaign launched by Torino Social Impact in 2025 and showcased across the city on billboards and trams. The campaign aims to promote the social economy and highlight the synergy between the for-profit and non-profit sectors. In the photo, one eye is made up in a “business” style, while the other evokes diversity and a “social” commitment. Both aspects can coexist harmoniously, just as they do on the girl’s face.
